Thesis Review

Before final acceptance, all members of a student's graduate committee, department/program chair, school/college dean, and the Graduate School dean must approve a thesis as required by the student's graduate program. Changes or corrections to the thesis may be required at any of these levels. The graduate committee is primarily responsible for thesis evaluation, grammar, punctuation, and usage, but the department chair and college dean may also conduct reviews to monitor the quality of these and check for any overlooked errors. The Graduate School checks that format and style conform to UAA standards. Ideally, these checks should be made before the defense of the thesis or dissertation. Thesis signature pages must be approved by the Graduate School prior to the thesis defense. In addition, the Graduate School dean ~~may~~ will review selected theses in detail and ~~does~~ will not give final approval until all required corrections are made. Thesis credits will be given a deferred grade (DF) until all requirements are met.
